

End-Of-Pipe Air Pollution Control Equipment - European Market Perspective

November 1, 2009

Abstract:

Air Pollution Control (APC) equipment, a part of the environmental industry, is hugely impacted by government and the actions of green lobby groups to keep environmental issues at bay. The growing magnitude of air pollution has created a niggling worry over its impact on the ecology and human health, and has pushed national governments into taking initiatives designed to control the levels of air pollution.

End-of-pipe APC equipment market, stands immensely benefited by the market's excessive dependence on regulations since it offers sustained market demand for "tackled on" APC equipments, which are predominantly end-of-the-pipe. This is primarily because pressure on compliance within a stipulated time frame leads plants to invest in end-of-pipe technologies as a last resort, as against integrated pollution control measures, which require greater investments, and longer implementation time.

These and other market data and trends are presented in "End-of-Pipe Air Pollution Control Equipment: European Market Perspective" by BizAcumen LLC. Our reports are designed to be most comprehensive in geographic coverage and vertical market analyses.
